Her breast is the pearl-home s lining, From Oman s sunny sea; Her arms the ivory shining, Where gay lamps lighted be. On her lips, the dew I seize Is honey from virgin flowers; Her breath is the scented breeze From Mytha s orange bowers. Though in thought, in toast, in song, I place her still before all; She preserves her heart so long, I think it must be coral. Oh, were it the anthracite The swarthy miner raises, A spark of my love should light, And kindle it into blazes! POETS FICTIONS. By The Editor. I PITY the poets that deck the loved fair, In cold, lifeless charms, drawn from earth, sea, and air; Ruby lips, golden ringlets, and diamond eyes, Such creations like Frankenstein-monsters arise. Who would sigh for his love if her forehead were stone? Were her eyes real brilliants would he not groan? Romantic is he, who can deem it a bliss, That from mineral lips he may snatch a cold kiss! Then just think of the grief of a beautiful girl, To have soft silken hair that would ne er keep in curl; Or bright golden ringlets --namely, corkscrews in.wire: She d up-braid them, and cast them to melt in the fire. What fair lady, carrying the neck of a swan, t Could ever be dear to a rational man? And I m very sure, that my heart...
