Story of the Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire Light Infantry (The Old 43rd and 52nd Regiments) (Paperback)

By Henry Newbolt

Naval Military Press Ltd, United Kingdom, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. New ed of 1915 ed. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Some time ago I read of an officer of the old 52nd who used to strop his razor fifty-two times every morning before shaving. In 1881, when the Cardwell reforms took effect, the 52nd were linked with the 43rd. The officer concerned still stropped his razor fifty-two times but when he reached forty-three he turned his head to one side and spat. It is doubtful the author had ever heard this story because his version of the amalgamation speaks of brotherhood between the two regiments. Sir Henry Newbolt was a well-known literary figure of his time, poet, novelist, historian (he wrote the last two volumes of the Official Naval History) and very much a patriot. In this book he tells the story of both regiments from their formation to the end of 1914. Each chapter covers a specific period and the fortunes of the regiments during those periods are described five of the fifteen chapters are devoted to the Peninsular War. The 43rd was raised in 1741, at first as the 54th but this was changed in...
