Excerpt: . in drawing from Hamilton that acknowledgment of his principles on which he was condemned. 1 he solemn summons of the dying martyr sunk so deeply into his mind, that, in a short time, he died distracted, and under the most awful apprehension of coming wrath. The martyrdom of Hamilton took place in the time of James V., but so far from stopping, it tended in no small degree to promote, the progress of gospel truth. The patience he showed when in the fire excited so great compassion, that many were persuaded of his innocence, and, in short, a general anxiety prevailed to be informed what the articles were for which he suffered, in consequence of which they became converts to his opinions. This was particularly the case in the universities, and many friars also, after this, began openly in their sermons to condemn the errors and corruptions of the clergy. They were therefore marked out as fit objects for persecution. Some of these were obliged to save themselves by flight, and no fewer than nine, besides Hamilton, were, during this reign, burnt alive. The opinions of the Ileformors, however, continued to spread, till, in the next reign, to which we now proceed, the Popish religion was completely overthrown, and that of Protestantism established on its ruins. PERIOD FOURTH. From the death of James V., in 1542, to the union of the Scottish and English crowns under James VI., in 1603. CHAP. I. Cardinal...
