KINGS AT ARMS

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 354 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.8in. A lady, haughty and fierce in her natural character, but schooled to at least the outward show of a cold patience by long years of training in submission to the wills of men, sat in a little private dining-room of her palace at Stockholm and frowned with an air of discontent and pride at her companion, a gentleman, elderly but much younger than herself, who stood by the fireplace and looked on the ground; he also had an air by no means well satisfied, but though he was only a minister and she was a Queen he had never been as much in the background as she, nor so forced to subdue an imperious spirit, for she was a woman, and women had never counted for much in Sweden. They did not like each other. Count Piper, the late Kings minister, and Eleanora Edwiga, the late Kings mother; she knew that she owed to him her forced retirement from the brief-prized power that she had held as Regent, and he thought her very presence in the palace was vexatious and that her place was in retirement with her prayer-book and her embroidery, but for the moment they were in the same position and might be useful to each other, therefore, tacitly ignoring mutual dislike, they became allies. I do not know, said the Queen, why we talk about these things, for, of course, the King will do as he wishes. She spoke with a certain chill triumph, and Count Piper knew that her words meant, If I cannot rule my grandson, neither can you; he also knew that she spoke from pure malice, and that she found every use in...
